Six Nations Fail To Give Troop Nod

WASHINGTON (AP) -The American republics voted Friday night for withdrawal of the inter American peace force from the Dominican Republic. But even in doing so, six of them said they were not recog-nizing the right of the troops to be there.

Only Mexico refused on the final vote to approve the withdrawal resolution, and recorded an abstention.

The five other nations which said their favorable votes did not mean they approved the Dominican Republic after a bloody civil war last April were: Chile, Peru, Ecuador, Uruguay and Venezuela.

SOLE NATION Mexico, the only nation in the Organization of American American States which maintains diplomatic and trade relations with Cuba, despite an OAS decision not to do so, commented that it voted against creation of the peace force.

The decision came at a meeting of the representatives of the American republics in the OAS, sitting as a special conference on consultation in representation of the foreign ministers of the hemisphere.

The United States, Brazil and four other nations supply troops or police for the inter-American force had asked that the force be withdrawn as soon as the outgoing and incoming govern-ments of the Dominican Repub-

U.S. Studies Bombing Haiphong's Oil Facility

city of Haiphong will not be exempt from bombing for much The Defense Department declined comment on published reports that a high-level decision already has been made to strike at the oil close to Hai-

"We obviously should not and do not discuss operational decisions affecting possible future actions," the Pentagon said.

The speculation that some previously exempt targets might be struck has been circulating since President Johnso nlast Saturday gave a veiled suggestion at a news conference to the effect that "we must continue to raise the cost of aggression at its source"—an obvious reference to North Viet Nam.

The tempo of the air war in North Viet Nam generally has rise steadily since the end of the 37-day bombing pause in January. The rate is running at between 200 and 300 per cent of the level before the pause, with between 9,000 and 11,000 sorties a month. A sortie is one mission by one plane.
It is known that consideration of the possible bombing of the oil installations near Haiphong and other targets in the Haiphong and Hanoi areas has been given repeated and intense consideration for months.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have unanimously favored striking at the fuel and oil stocks in the Haiphong area as a top-priority

They have re-emphasized this position repeatedly to the civilian leaders, contending that knocking out these supplies would deal a heavy blow at the ability of the Communists to continue to run truck convoys carrying supplies and men to South Viet Nam.

But the civilian leaders have vetoed any strikes close to Hanoi and Haiphong because of the risk of inflicting heavy civilian casualties and perhaps triggering a military reaction from Red China.

The civilians also have rejected mining or other actions against the Haiphong harboranother move backed by the Joint Chiefs-in part because of the risk of hitting Soviet ships in port and thus possibly forcing the Soviet Union into a bigger role in the Viet Nam war.

But, while the major oil depot near Haiphong has been left alone, U.S. Air Force and Navy fighter-bombers have smashed at pertroleum storage areas on at least 28 days since April 1.

This week alone, they struck at nearly a dozen oil storage depots in a three-day period. These targets were no closer than 28 miles to Hanoi, most of them north and northeast of the capital city. Fuel dumps also were bombed near Vinh and Dong Hoi in the lower part of Viet Nam, well away from either Hanoi or Haiphong.

The Defense Department has said the limiting factor in air operations North Viet Nam is not the distance from the capital or from the port city but rather "the minimization of civilian casualties."

'Our objective is to avoid civilian casualties while striking essential military targets," the Pentagon has said.

Responsible Leadership?

In attacking Negro marches designed to incite violence and possibly contemplating violence and serious law violations themselves, the Memphis Commercial Appeal carried an editorial page cartoon in which a large, dark and somewhat shadowy figure, labelled "Responsible Negro Leadership" was holding up a restraining hand against the foul-talking marchers. This raises the serious question of where responsible Negro leadership is to be found.

Surely none of the head men of four of the leading integration organizations in this country could qualify as responsible integration leaders, although officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which was in existence long before agitation for integration became such a profitable enterprise, seem somewhat less radical and violent than those of some of the other organizations.

Top officials of four integration groups include: Floyd McKissick, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality; Stokely Carmichael, chairman of the Student Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee; Martin Luther King, head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; and Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

King and Wilkins are less violent than the other two leaders but we would be extremely loath to call them responsible in view of the great number of statements they have made showing that they are far from being satisfied with mere establishment of equal rights. Everyone with any reasoning ability knows that laws already passed by Congress have bestowed on Negroes privileges never enjoyed by white people in this country but everyone of the leaders of the integration groups is calling for more and stronger laws designed to give Negroes privileges and positions which they have not earned and for which they are lacking in ability.

James Meredith, first Negro to enter the University of Mississippi, which he did with the assistance of federal troops, is a professional provocator and there are many who believe he volunteered recently to be the recipient of a load of bird shot fired from a gun a long distance off while his back was turned in order to gain support for congressional passage of more laws favoring Negroes.

Carmichael and Meredith, two of the nation's civil rights leaders who certainly cannot be called "responsible leaders," for several years have carried out their operations under the banner of nonviolence. Now they have made it clear that "non-violence" is merely a conciliatory sounding name purpose. They have demonstrated that violence is their real purpose. They have demonstrated they are willing and perhaps eager to participate in violence in future attempts to gain special favors for Negroes at the expense of personal liberty and the right to choose one's own associates among white people.

Meredith and Carmichael, in recent public statements, lacked the courage to state openly that they would use guns or other force but they left no doubt in the minds of any who heard them that such forceful action is contemplated in the future.

Prior to enactment of federal laws giving Negroes special privileges and the Supreme Court decisions virtually saying Negroes could violate state laws in pursuit of the "grand cause" of integration, both state and federal law enforcement officers were committed to the restraint of mob violence, even though the use of machine guns might be necessary. Why the United States Supreme Court seems to condone unlawful violence, committed for the sole purpose of agitating and arousing law-abiding citizens and making those citizens likely to resort to violence themselves, is something no right-thinking person has been able to understand

Asked whether he would reject violence, Carmichael replied that violence or non-violence is a tactical matter, that non-violence is a "tactic and not a way of life" for the S. N. C. C. and that he personally has never rejected violence as a tactic to gain the ends he seeks.

When questioned about his previous statement that he would not return to Mississippi unarmed, Meredith never quite said he would carry a weapon but stated he would feel obliged to take matters into his own hands if the responsible officials did not give him protection. This brings up the question of who is entitled to be given the most protection when a mad dog is attacking another animal or a human being. Ordinarily, the one who commits an aggression is the one who'should be arrested.

The significance of Meredith's threat was sharpened when he charged that the Federal Bureau of Investigation agents and Mississippi and local officials "did nothing" when he was shot from ambush on the first day of his march from Jackson.

What did he expect the officers to do? They arrested a suspect within minutes after the shooting, jailed him, placed him under heavy bond and he faces trail on assault charges. Did Meredith expect officers to gun down the assailant?

The affair had the earmarks of a stage publicity stunt. It was stated that the assailant was drunk, that he was about 100 yards away from Meredith and that he shouted to Meredith and called him by name before firing. Almost immediately it was announced Meredith had been killed, which could have been a part of the whole arrangement, but a few minutes later he was making muchpublicized statements in front of cameras.

The effect of the inflammatory statements and threats by these two leaders has been immediately evident. The marchers arriving at Belzoni began by chanting "white folks must go," and built up their emotional response by nightfall to the point where they were crying "We're gonna get some white blood."

If this sort of inflammatory incitation continues, Negro leaders may well find themselves involved in a confrontation that will result in a situation they will regret and which will have far-reaching consequences.

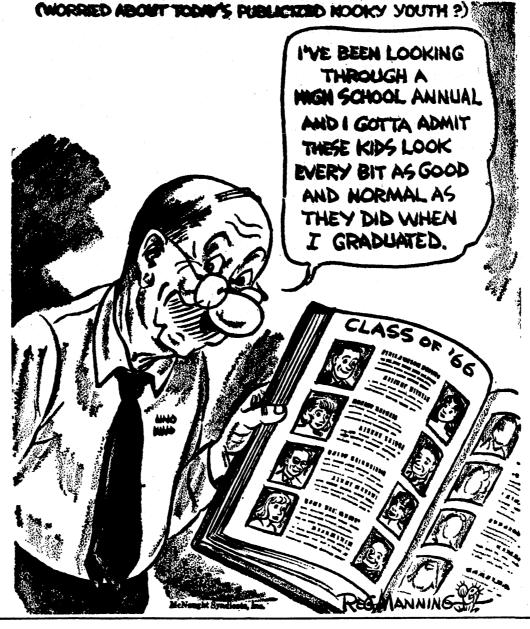

Repercussions can be expected in the cities where large numbers of Negroes are congregated, in the North and on the West Coast, for both Meredith and Carmichael made it clear they do not intend to strive for "black power" only in Mississippi and in Alabama. Neither would condemn the Watts riots in Los Angeles, for example, and both indicated that force might well be the next step everywhere in the nation.

If now the leaders of that movement mean to seek to extend their gains and try to seize power by force, they must be prepared to expect a reaction of force in defense of law and order. That reaction almost certainly will cancel out many of the gains which the Negroes have made in recent years.

If these desecraters of peace were not given unwarranted protection and license by the federal government, there would be no such marches. State and local officers are fully capable and more than willing to bring to an end such assaults on the peace and dignity of communities.

Members of Congress, the chief executive of this country and members of the Supreme Court who have followed a course that has brought about this wretched situation, should bow their heads in shame over their desecration of the Constitution of the United States and its guarantee of states' rights. They should do more than that. They should set about to remedy the wrongs they have brought upon us.

Freedom Food Bill 'Tops'

May Get Top Place In This And Last Session

THE FOOD - FOR- Freedom legislation now moving toward enactment with bipartisan backing may in retrospect be accorded top place in importance of all legislation considered by this or the preceding session of Congress.

It is a gigantic measure, providing as it does a two-year $6,600,000,000 program to sate the world's hunger. These two years and this appropriation are, of course, only the starters. The testimony before House of Representatives and Senate committees attest to this. Actually the Administration would have liked to have started with a five-year program.

The legislation will be one of the steps and extensions of a program begun by President Dwight D. Eisenhower in his first two years in office and by the only Congress in which Eisenhower had no glamorous title. It was known only as Public Law 480.

THE ORIGINAL ideal was to sell abroad surplus United States farm products then piling up in Government - leased warehouses taking in payment the soft currencies of those countries. Subsequent Congresses extended Public Law 480 into the Food-for-Peace program, which in the last decade has made available 140 million tons of United States food to hungry peoples, and which is now costing around $2,000,000,000 a year. So the Food-For-Freedom program would up the cost by $1,300,000,000 an-Early this year President Johnson proposed the extension of Public Law 480, which expires this year, but under a new name with a distinct and farand reaching shift in policy: There will be deliberate production in the United States of food for a world, rather than hungry merely the sale of surpluses produced under farm programs. The revised law will empower the Government to go into the open market and buy food for shipment abroad.

The bill has the strong support of farm areas, which view it as a means of boosting United States farm output and export, eventually bringing back into production millions of fertile acres of land now in retirement under various crop-control programs.

In 1966 alone, corporations will give away a record $100,000,000 in cash and other prizes in 600 nationwide contests and sweepstakes. As an indication of the huge numbers of individuals involved, there were an estimated more than 30 million entries in Pepsi-Cola's recent $2 million "World-Wide Shopping Spree" sweepstakes.

This type of contest has gone into a decline because it encouraged "semi - professional" contestfollowers, many of whom became perennial winners, and even resulted in a special school which peddled mail-order instructions on successful contest slogan-writing. Also behind the sweepstakes surge, says Stanley Arnold, a New York marketing consultant who has dreamed up more than $75 million worth of contests, sweepstakes and similar "excitement" for major U.S. corporations over the past decade, is the fact that in today's fiercely competitive market, it's hard for an individual company to get the consumer's attention. Says Arnold: "advertising and promotion agencies have to use every ingenious come-on."

The mere act of sending in a lucky number, he adds, may win a slight edge for a particular product in the battle for your favor. And, of course, if the contest stipulates that you consult a list of "lucky numbers" posted in a store, you'll probably at least take a look at the product being promoted.

HOW HONEST are today's sweepstakes? Do you really have a fair chance to win — particularly if you put your number in the slot which says "no, I don't want to buy your product but I still want a chance to win your sweepstakes?"

"We have no evidence of dishonesty in nationally-advertised sweepstakes," says a Better Business Bureau spokesman. 'Most of these promotions are run by big U.S. corporations and they go to great lengths to avoid any possible charges of rigging. Also, notes Arnold, virtually all of the specialized outside judging agencies which select sweepstakes winners check thoroughly on potential winners, after their names have been drawn, to make sure there are no company employes or other insiders among them.

The obvious drawback to you the participant, is that with hundreds of thousands, or even tens of millions, of entrants, your chances of winning any sizeable prize are infinitesimal. As one of my correspondents complained recently: "I've sent in more than 400 entries, without winning a nickel."

But even the dismal odds against winning appear to be no deterrent to the millions who can't resist chasing the age-old dream of something for nothing.

mation on the world's population and its food problems was supplied in the debate on the measure in the House of Representatives. Especially pointed were allusions to how the gap between food supply and population is growing because of the a n n u a l accruements to populations through births.

Giving India as an example, Representative Harold D. Cooley Democrat, North Carolina, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, said that continuation of present trends will mean population increase there from 432,000,000 in 1960 to 1,233,000,000 in the year 2000.

In 1980, less than 15 years

from now, Cooley said, world population will probably increase by 1,200,000,000 from its present 3,400,000,000 to 4,600,000,000, and by the year 2030, world population will reach 14,000,000,000.

Representative Catherline

Representative Catherline May, Republican, Washington, wondered how with the population increase, mass starvation is to be avoided.

"Do we have enough soil in the world to grow food for the inevitable increase in population?" the Pacific Coast Congresswoman asked. "Where is it? What is going to bring it into production? This is one of the basics of this legislation."

ABOUT 70 PERCENT of the world's surface is water, with the other 30 per cent, or 33,000,000,000 acres in land. Of this 3,500,000,000 acres is the world's present cropland — regular, fallow, rotational pasture — a little more than an acre per person.

Mrs. May said that by the time the land under polar ice, in mountain ranges and in deserts is eliminated from consideration, the potential arable land in the world-including the present cropland - would be 6,600, 000,000 acres. The cost of reclaiming substantial new land would be fantastic, she said, so the conclusion of the experts is that increased food production must be obtained for the most part by enhancing the productivity of soil now under cultivation, or which has been under cultivation.

The legislation emphasizes the use of American "know - how" and "show - how" to aid friendly countries toward a greater degree of self - reliance and proper use of their own agricultural resources.

Cooley sees the United States eventully recovering its cost of financing its leadership in the war on world hunger through concomitant exports of machinery and manufactured goods. He also foresees the 60,000,00 United States acres of cropland put into retirement by the various farm programs brought back into production as it is needed.

THE LEGISLATION as finally enacted will undoubtedly contain the provisions of the House bill in putting the official United States stamp of approval on population control. The House committee report said:

"The increase of the world population is so awesome as to seem unreal. . . Mass starvation will inevitably result on a scale never before experienced. ... unless family planning is accorded a priority."

And in the debate in the House, Representative Thomas G. Abernathy, Democrat, Mississippi, said:

"There is a serious question today whether the world's greatest crises of the future will come from atomic explosions — which we pray will not happen — or from the population explosion, which is already happening. At its present rate of increase world population will increase as much in the next 35 years as it has from the beginning of

'Upmanship' Problem In War In Viet Nam

THE PRESIDENT'S problem, in grappling with the Viet Cong, is in part a problem in oneupmanship. His task is to increase the pressure without actually escalating the war.

"We must continue to raise the cost of aggression at its source," said the President in his Saturday press conference. Then the President added a comment that suggests he may be overlooking one appealing means toward that end. He said: "And that is the sole purpose of our use of air strength against selected military targets."

Air strength alone? Off and on over the past nine months, various voices have been heard, suggesting an old - fashioned supplement: the potential firepower of naval guns.

Hindsight is always so much better than foresight! If only some hard thought had been given five or ten years ago to the continuing uses of conventional navy weapons, the whole course of the war in Viet Nam might have been altered. But it was perhaps inevitable that in the concentration on such fantastic deterrents as the Polaris submarine — especially when there was never enough money to go around — most naval attention turned toward weapons of the future.

IN THIS PROCESSS, the Navy regrettably, if understandably, has tended to neglect the art and science of naval gun-As Colonel Robert D. has written in U. S. Institute Proceedings, serious training of gunnery officers "simply ceased about ten years ago and has never been revived." The annual advanced course in gunnery, given each summer at Quantico, hasn't been held in almost a decade. Necessary small - scale charts no longer are being produced. The rear turrets vanished from the cruisers Boston and Canberra and guided missiles appeared in their place. And the really big guns - the 16-inchers-vanished into Cosmolene and mothballs. Is it too late to consider a tactical change that would adapt these old weapons to the war in Viet Nam? At the very top of the Navy — at the level of Admiral David L. McDonald, chief of naval operations — there is not much interest in the concept, thought it is notable that several months ago McDonald asked permission to get one mothballed 8-inch cruiser into full active duty in the Pacific and to bring another to 30-day readiness in the Reserves. The request was turned down for budgetary reasons, and McDonald did not pursue it.

Others have seized on the idea with greater vigor. Colonel Heinl, now retired from the Marine Corps, is one of the country's leading authorities on the use of naval firepower. He was formerly director of the Gunfire School at Quantico. His article last September in the Naval Institute Proceedings sparked a major discussion within the profession.

"THE QUESTION OF reactivating a battleship," he wrote, "ought to be carefully considered. We are now regularly conducting shore bombardment in Viet Nam, using 5-inch and 6-inch guns. Think how much greater we could realize from the virtually doubled range inland and enormously multiplied hitting power of 16-inch projectiles, and how much more economical such gun s r i k e s would be than air attacks against the same targets."

The same arguments were advanced early this year by Admiral John S. McCain, Jr., vice-chairman of the U.S. delegation on the UN's military staff committee. He recommended flatly that the Missouri be taken out of her mothballs at Bremerton, Wash., and restored to active service at the earliest possible moment.

A few weeks after McCain's proposal, the civilian magazine "Navy" in February carried a major article, "Bring Back the Big Guns." In its June issue, the magazine returns to the theme with a piece by Dr. Howard D. Greyber, a British professor of mathematics who writes with bell-like authority.

THESE COMBINED arguments make sense. The Missouri's big guns can deliver the same conventional explosives in three hours that otherwise would require 500 fighter-bombers. This punch can be delivered with high accuracy, at relatively low cost, and at almost no risk of a serviceman's life. At the time the Missouri was decommissioned her guns could loft a 2,300 - pound projectile for 21 statute miles, Today, says Dr. Greyber, new propellants make it possible to shoot a 2,000-pound projectile up to 44 miles, or a 1,700-pound shell up to 50 miles. The peculiar geography of Viet Nam makes it possible for only six turrets to cover 85 per cent of the critical Aerial bombing carries political and psychological connotations that naval bombardment, for some reason, does not. Certainly planes are required for targets beyond the potential reach of the "Mighty Mo," and no man in his right mind would suggest that other naval advances be abandoned. The building of a new nuclear fleet is more important than a return to techniques that began with Drake against the Spanish Armada.

Yet in congressional hearings two months ago, Admiral Mc-Donald testified that "every day of the year, General Westmoreland asks for naval gunfire support." The Navy now is sending destroyers to do a battleship's job. If we had the big guns off shore, Lyndon Johnson might get his added pressure, for only 16 inches of escalation.

Secret, Personal Tab On Everyone Planned

A FEW WEEKS AGO I warned of the long-range possibilities that the federal government would set-up a central file containing every scrap of information they could get on every U.S. citizen.

It appeared a far - fetched warning to some of my readers, as their mail indicated.

Exactly such a proposal is under serious study by the Johnson administration. It was disclosed in a Senate hearing that it has been considered since last December, proposed by a firm named, ironically, Resources for the Future, Inc., a consultant to the Bureau of the Budget.

News stories, which seemed to treat the matter as a routine extension of the Great Planned Society, report this consulting firm sees a central data center on our citizens as more efficient than the dozens of separate files now being maintained.

The most chilling statistic is the firm's estimate that the federal government already has "billions" of pieces of information on the citizens it is supposed to be serving.

AN OFFICIAL of Resources for the Future, Inc., apparently sensing that some Americans might view their proposal with alarm, explains: "What is proposed here isn't any kind of extension of the authority of the power of government to seek information from individuals." The data center, he goes on to say, "would have the classical records that have been established as appropriate for many, many years . . . records that pertain to the public face of the individual."

Well and good so far as the recommendation goes, so far as

Would such an administration confine a central file on all the citizens to "classical records" and the "public face of the individual"?

Would a President, who might enjoy reading income tax returns the way some people enjoy mystery novels, exercise real restraint in the use of a vast central file?

Greater political power than ever before has been taken over by the White House. To give it, in addition, the central-files power of a police state to snoop and pry more than it does already would be to invite disaster simply to boast of efficiency.

Considering the one - party, one - personality power to which we are subjected under the reign of Lyndon Johnson, this is not the time to give federal computers more power or information. It might be a far better time to start taking some of that power away before it burns us all.

> Also behind the sweepstakes surge, says Stanley Arnold, a New York marketing consultant who has dreamed up more than $75 million worth of contests, sweepstakes and similar "excitement" for major U.S. corporations over the past decade, is the fact that in today's fiercely competitive market, it's hard for an individual company to get the consumer's attention. Says Arnold: "advertising and promotion agencies have to use every ingenious come-on

The mere act of sending in a lucky number, he adds, may win a slight edge for a particular product in the battle for your favor. And, of course, if the contest stipulates that you consult a list of "lucky numbers" posted in a store, you'll probably at least take a look at the product being promoted.

HOW HONEST are today's sweepstakes? Do you really have a fair chance to win - particularly if you put your number in the slot which says "no, I don't want to buy your product but I still want a chance to win your sweepstakes?"

"We have no evidence of dishonesty in nationally-advertised sweepstakes," says a Better Business Bureau spokesman. 'Most of these promotions are run by big U.S. corporations and they go to great lengths to avoid any possible charges of rigging. Also, notes Arnold, virtually all of the specialized outside judging agencies which select sweepstakes winners check thoroughly on potential winners, after their names have been drawn, to make sure there are no company or other insiders among them.

The obvious drawback to you the participant, is that with hundreds of thousands, or even tens of millions, of entrants, your chances of winning any sizeable prize are infinitesimal. As one of my correspondents complained recently: "I've sent in more than 400 entries, without winning a nickel. But even the dismal odds against winning appear to be no deterrent to the millions who can't resist chasing the age-old mation on the world's population and its food problems was supplied in the debate on the measure in the House of Representatives. Especially pointed were allusions to how the gap between food supply and population is growing because of the n n u a l accruements to populations through births.

Giving India as an example, Representative Harold D. Cooley Democrat, North Carolina, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, said that continuation of present trends will mean population increase there from 432,000,000 in 1960 to 1,233,000,000 in the year 2000 In 1980, less than 15 years from now, Cooley said, world population will probably increase by 1,200,000,000 from its present 400,000,000 to 4,600,000,000, and by the year 2030, world population will reach 14,000,000,000

Representative Catherline May, Republican, Washington, wondered how with the population increase, mass starvation is to be avoided.

"Do we have enough soil in the world to grow food for the inevitable increase in popula tion?" the Pacific Coast Congresswoman asked. "Where is it? What is going to bring it into production? This is one of the basics of this legislation.'

ABOUT 70 PERCENT of the world's surface is water, with the other 30 per cent, or 33,000,-000,000 acres in land. Of this 3, 500,000,000 acres is the world's present cropland - regular, fallow, rotational pasture — a little more than an acre per per-

Mrs. May said that by the time the land under polar ice, in mountain ranges and in deserts is eliminated from consideration, the potential arable land in the world-including the present cropland - would be 6,600,-000,000 acres. The cost of reclaiming substantial new land would be fantastic, she said, so the conclusion of the experts is that increased food production must be obtained for the most part by enhancing the productivity of soil now under cultivation, or which has been under cultivation.

The legislation emphasizes the use of American "know - how" and "show - how" to aid friendly countries toward a greater degree of self - reliance and proper use of their own agricultural resources.

Cooley sees the United States eventully recovering its cost of financing its leadership in the war on world hunger through concomitant exports of machinery and manufactured goods. He also foresees the 60, 000,00 United States acres of cropland put into retirement by the various farm programs brought back into production as it is needed.

THE LEGISLATION as finally enacted will undoubtedly contain the provisions of the House bill in putting the official United States stamp of approval on population control. The House committee report said: "The increase of the world population is so awesome as to Mass starvaseem unreal. tion will inevitably result on a scale never before experienced. unless family planning is accorded a priority

And in the debate in the House, Representative Thomas G. Abernathy, Democrat, Mississippi, said

'There is a serious question today whether the world's greatest crises of the future will come from atomic explosions - which we pray will not happen - or from the population explosion, which is already happening. At its present rate of increase world population will increase as much in the next 35 years as it has from the beginning of "THE QUESTION OF reactivating a battleship," ought to be carefully consider ed. We are now regularly conducting shore bombardment in Viet Nam, using 5-inch and inch guns. Think how much greater we could realize from the virtually doubled range in-land and enormously multiplied hitting power of 16-inch projectiles, and how much more economical such gun srikes would be than air attacks against the same targets."

The same arguments were advanced early this year by Admiral John S. McCain, Jr., vice-chairman of the U.S. delegation on the UN's military committee. staff mended flatly that the Missouri be taken out of her mothballs at Bremerton, Wash., and restored to active service at the earliest possible moment.

A few weeks after McCain's proposal, the civilian magazine in February carried a major article, "Bring Back the Big Guns." In its June issue, the magazine returns to the theme with a piece by Dr. Howard D. Greyber, a British professor of mathematics who writes with bell-like authority.

THESE COMBINED argu ments make sense. The Mis souri's big guns can deliver the same conventional explosives in three hours that otherwise would require 500 fighter-bombers. This punch can be delivered with high accuracy, at re latively low cost, and at almost no risk of a serviceman's life At the time the Missouri was decommissioned her guns could loft a 2,300 - pound projectile for 21 statute miles. Today, says Dr. Greyber, new propellants make it possible to shoot a 2,000-pound projectile up to 44 miles, or a ,700-pound shell up to 50 miles peculiar geography of South Viet Nam makes it possible for only six turrets to cover 85 per cent of the critical

Yet in congressional hearings two months ago, Admiral Mc Donald testified that "every day of the year, General Westmoreland asks for naval gunfire support." The Navy now is sending destroyers to do a battleship's job. If we had the big guns off shore, Lyndon Johnson might get his added pressure,

Secret, Personal Tab On Everyone Planned

A FEW WEEKS AGO I warned of the long-range possibilities that the federal government would set-up a central file containing every scrap of information they could get on every

It appeared a far - fetched warning to some of my readers, as their mail indicated.

Exactly such a proposal is under serious study by the Johnson administration. It was disclosed in a Senate hearing that it has been considered since last December, proposed by a firm named, ironically, Resources for the Future, Inc., a consultant to the Bureau of the Budget.

News stories, which seemed to treat the matter as a routine extension of the Great Planned Society, report this consulting firm sees a central data center on our citizens as more effi cient than the dozens of separ ate files now being maintained.

The most chilling statistic is the firm's estimate that the federal government already has 'billions" of pieces of information on the citizens it is supposed to be serving.

AN OFFICIAL of Resources for the Future, Inc., apparently sensing that some Americans might view their proposal with alarm, explains: "What is proposed here isn't any kind of extension of the authority of the power of government to seek in formation from individuals." The data center, he goes on to say would have the classical records that have been established as appropriate for many, many records that pertain to the public face of the indivi-be true.

Is a person 45 years of age required to have a birth certificate in order to remarry if he has been married and divorced in Louisiana before?

The law governing the issuance of marriage licenses makes no exceptions for what is required. However, if a person does not have a birth certificate — never has had one — he may write to the Bureau of Vital Statistics in New Orleans. This office, in return, makes a thorough check of the files, and if no record is found, a certified statement is sent back to the correspondent. He, in turn, must submit this with the application for the marriage license.

When will the Interstate 20 Highway be open all the way to Dallas?

Since a half-dozen high-way districts in two states are involved, only a conference with the chief engineers of each district along the route would provide the correct answer to this question for contraction of the tion, for construction of the highway is done on the district level and depends upon individual situations in each district. It can be safely stated, however, that the highway should be completed by 1972, the deadline set by the federal government. The federal government feels the highway can be completed on a pay-as-you-go basis by this time. In case of need, the highway perhaps could be completed earlier by borrowing money from the future. The final 1.8 mile section of the R. L. Thornton Freeway through Dallas was officially opened on April 28 of this year. It linked 400 miles of inter-state highways in the North Texas area and completed an east-west bypass around Downtown Dallas. The Interstate Highway is complete from Monroe to short of Shreveport and from Tyler, Tex., to Dallas. Work is being done on the link of Interstate from Bossier City east to Barksdale Air Force Base, with much of the bridgework already con-structed. The term "0-5" was the code designation late in the war for a plan to turn over to the Russian army the city of Vienna, Austria, and avoid its being bombed and shelled into submission, thereby destroying historic sites and art treasures. The designation was exchanged in radio and other communications between the Viennese underground and those few in the Red Army sympathetic to the plan's purpose. The plan, incidentally, did not work.

In the number of such bonds that may be held, there has been no change. Neither has there been any recent change in the total amount of bonds that may be held. An individual may acquire a maximum of $10,000 each year in Series E bonds. The last change was several years ago, when the maximum was $7,500.

Because there was no local markets, Earle sought to ship the berries to Chicago via the Illinois Central Railroad. In the spring of 1866, Earle built several large wooden chests, each with three layers of boards which maintained constant protective tempera-tures. Each chest was waterproof and airtight. In the bottom was a chamber several inches deep for the storage of ice. When the season was in full swing, Earle had 12 chests ready with each capable of packing 100 pounds of ice and 200 quarts of strawberries. In-cidentally, the berries arrived in Chicago in perfect condition and brought as high as $2 a quart on the market. This is reported to be the beginning of the fruit shipments under refrigera-tion on railroads of the United States.

Is a person 45 years of age required to have a birth certificate in order to remarry if he has been married and divorced in Louisiana before?

The law governing the issuance of marriage licenses makes no exceptions for what is required. However, if a person does not have a birth certificate — never has had one — he may write to the Bureau of Vital Statistics in New Orleans. The Race

To win the world championship drag racing title is worth $100,000. To have a chance to win this title (and the $100,000 if you please), one must compete for points in Divisional Races throughout the region in which he resides.

Today and tomorrow at Harmon Raceway you will have the opportunity to see one of these such Divisional Races, and possibly see a man perform who will be pocketing $100,000 on Oct. 31 in Tulsa, Okla., at the conclusion of the 1966 world championship races.

Harmon is one of seven tracks throughout the Southwest Region hosting these Divisionals this summer in association with the National Hot Rod Association. Other divisional race sites in this region include Oklahoma City, Victoria, Tex., Opelousas, Tulsa, Austin and Amarillo, Tex. States in our region are Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana and New Mexico.

In order to get a better representation of talent, the NHRA split the country into seven sections before this season opened with each section unreeling seven divisional races. To become eligible for the world finals in Tulsa a driver has to pile up enough points in his class to finish among the top five from his region in that class.

These top five in each class (there are seven classes) from the seven regions advance to the finals. This puts the top 245 cars in the country on the firing line in October to compete for the big money.

As an indication of how big these divisionals are, last week 13,000 watched one at Opelousas in which over 400 cars participated.

Opelousas had — that being an open air strip where the lacingles which they could actually have accommodated even more. However, Harmon can find room for approximate-ly 8,500 and it is likely they will have the opportunity to do so Sunday.

Automobile racing, whether it be the endurance type of the Indianapolis 500 or the quarter-mile strip for dragging such as is at Harmon, is gaining more in popularity every year.

The Race Is On

To win the world championship drag racing title worth $100,000. To have a chance to win this title (and the $100,000 if you please), one must compete for points in Divisional Races throughout the region in which he resides.

Today and tomorrow at Harmon Raceway you will have the opportunity to see one of these such Divisional Races, and possibly see a man perform who will be pocketing $100,000 on Oct. 31 in Tulsa, Okla., at the conclusion of the 1966 world championship races.

Harmon is one of seven tracks throughout the Southwest Region hosting these Divisionals this summer in association with the National Hot Rod Association. Other divisional race sites in this region include Oklahoma City, Victoria, Tex., Opelousas, Tulsa, Austin and Amarillo, Tex. States in our region are Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana and New Mexico.

In order to get a better representation of talent, the NHRA split the country into seven sections before this season opened with each section unreeling seven divisional races. To become eligible for the world finals in Tulsa a driver has to pile up enough points in his class to finish among the top five from his region in that class.

These top five in each class (there are seven classes) from the seven regions advance to the finals. This puts the top 245 cars in the country on the firing line in October to compete for Sports events that draw 100,000 in our country are indeed a rarity. But, even so, there are at least five auto races in the U. S. that draw over 100,000 during each year. CHICAGO (AP) - Cleon Jones, who walloped a gamewinning home run off Ken Holtzman May 6, slammed another off the Chicago Cubs' southpaw in the seventh inning Friday that carried the New York Mets to a 4-2 victory.

The homer, Jones' third of the season, broke a 2-2 tie and enabled veteran right-hander Bob Friend to record his first triumph for the Mets. He was obtained from the New York Yankees earlier this month. Jones also drove in the Mets' fourth run with a ninth inning single.

Friend yielded only five hits before he was relieved with one out and one man on in the seventh. Both runs off him were unearned. Jack Hamilton finished.

THIN PANCAKES

It's better to use a small skillet (6 to 8 inches) than a griddle when you are making thin French-type pancakes. Hold the not well-buttered skillet off the heat as you pour in the batter, then swirl the skillet so that the batter covers the bottom. Cook the pancakes quickly.
